er Chief Rabbi Yosef's opposition about MK named arriage registrar

By JUDY MIEGEL, Jerusalem Post Reporter

bi Menahem Hacohen, MK, yesterday named marriage registrar of the Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Haim Zolotow. Last night he charged Rabbi Yosef Yosef with "dirty tactics" to prevent registration of his marriage. Rabbi Yosef's opposition to the marriage of his son, Rabbi Yehoshua Yosef, to a girl named Sarah, has been a close friend of Goren for 20 years, threatens to create a new wave of quarrels between the two chief rabbis. Menahem Hacohen had asked the Ashkenazi Council to name him as their marriage registrar, according to the Ashkenazi Council's decision to register marriages in order to ease the plight of a rabbi who must travel long distances to register marriages. The appointment, he said, "I am accustomed to travelling from Ashdod to another, counselling and helping them register at their district rabbi. Now I can help them register myself." He will have authority to register marriages in Ashdod, he said.

Rabbi Menahem Hacohen, MK

that only the Religious Affairs Ministry and its employees may appoint marriage registrars. Zolotow added that the Chief Rabbi Council had no right to name Hacohen to the position. In a vellec reprimand to the Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi, Minister Zolotow said that Rabbi Hacohen should not have informed Rabbi Yosef of the council's move but rather sent the information to the Religious Affairs Ministry. Zolotow stated, however, that he did not find enough merit in Rabbi Yosef's arguments, and thus decided to name Rabbi Hacohen to the office of marriage registrar of the Ashkenazi movement. Rabbi Hacohen told The Post that Rabbi Yosef was motivated by "pettiness" rather than by "the Name of Heaven" in opposing the nomination. He added that the issue "could not worsen the trouble between the chief rabbis because their fights have already exceeded all bounds." Rabbi Yosef, attending Talmud classes in Eilat, could not be reached for comment.

Good chances for electoral reform law

Post Knesset Reporter

Prospects of the electoral reform law being passed by the present Knesset on the first reading improved radically yesterday after representatives of Labour, the Liberals (in Likud), the La'am (in Likud) and the CRM agreed on the principles of the necessary legislation.

The executive of the Labour Knesset to-day yesterday met with transport minister Gad Ya'acobi, Justice Minister Haim Zadok, and the Labour men on the Law Committee, and approved the conclusions reached so far among the four parties.

The legislation, which is now in the Law Committee, after the preliminary reading can be returned in agreed form to the plenum for a formal first reading in a short time. If it passes that formal first reading, then the next Knesset can take it up in Committee from that point under the Continuity Law, without having to go back to "Square One."

A Labour source told The Post that his party had given in to the Likud Liberals on several demands. Labour now agrees that the constituency boundaries be drawn by a Supreme Court Justice, that there be as few as 15 constituencies with five MKs returned from each; that there be as many as 45 MKs in the nationwide list; and that only a faction which gets at least three seats in two or three constituencies can win representation in the nationwide list.

The four factions, which have agreed on these principles together must win 40 votes. In addition, the Herut wing of the Likud is pondering a change in its hitherto adamant opposition to constituency elections, and some of its members may not fight the reform.

A Labour source told The Post that the three Liberals who formed the negotiating team, Simcha Erlich, Moshe Nisim and Zaiman Abramov, seemed strongly in favour of promoting the legislation. However, the Labour source warned: "Somebody in the Liberals could still demand a revision and put a spoke in our wheel."

Budget priorities to be re-examined

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Treasury's budget bureau has begun re-examining the State's revenue and expenditure estimates. This follows Monday's decision that the Treasury, failing to secure Knesset support for its own budget, is to present a new one outlined by the Likud opposition.

The new budget will be restricted to a four-month period and total not more than IL12.5. (The original one-year budget stood at IL12.5b.) The main task of the budget bureau is to determine which items of expenditure have to be included within the four-month budget, and which can be left for authorization later in the year.

Protest strikes on West Bank

Post Military Reporter

High school students crowded central squares in Nablus yesterday demonstrating for the release of political prisoners from Israel jails. Security forces fired tear gas into the crowd in the early afternoon and by last night five youngsters had been arrested and were being held for questioning.

Simultaneously there was a partial commercial strike in the town, and sympathy strikes were reported from Ramallah and Beit Hanina. Most schools in the towns were closed for the day, and at the El-Bira high school near Ramallah students held a demonstration in sympathy with security prisoners who held a hunger strike at the Ashkelon jail.

Israeli authorities said last week that the prisoners had stopped the 36-day strike, but the students told Reuters yesterday that they did not believe this.

Eggs and meat are bad for you, MK charges

By AARON SITNER, Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

A lean Knesset member yesterday declared war on sugar, eggs, butter and meat. But Mordechai Ben-Porat of the Alignment added, "I shall defend to the last the honour of fruits, vegetables, grains, nuts, oils and honey."

Ben-Porat's dietary diatribe came as he tabled a motion for the agenda on "Israeli eating habits and their influence on health."

After baying vilified with naturalists and nutritionists at their recent conference at Masada, Ben-Porat insisted that Health Minister Victor Shemtov should have demanded membership in all forums setting policy on food marketing and subsidies. Ben-Porat also blasted the Ministry of Commerce for giving special price advantage to 14 basic food commodities without considering their nutritional value.

He assailed the Agriculture Ministry for having set an egg production ceiling of 1,300 million cholesterol-rich eggs, "which means 400 eggs per year for every Israeli."

If Israelis improved their eating habits, he continued, IL4,280m. in local currency and $150m. in foreign currency (for food imports) could be saved. Sugar and candy production alone, he disclosed, costs the country IL430m. annually.

Ben-Porat demanded establishment of a "National Obesity Treatment Institute." He also called for an immediate halt to imports of beef and other foods rich in animal fat.

Replying, Health Minister Shemtov said local studies confirmed that bad eating habits caused "cruel and cumulative clinical effects" in persons between the ages of 40 and 50. In 1975 alone, 6,794 Israelis died of ischaemic heart disease and diabetes — and these constituted 30 percent of all adult deaths that year. According to Shemtov, both diseases are "closely associated with faulty food intake and selection."

Ben-Porat's motion was referred to committee.

Coins and Medals board to discuss irregularities

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN, Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Board of Directors of the Israel Government Coins and Medals Corporation is to meet shortly to discuss the alleged misconduct of its director, Yitzhak Avni. A board meeting in Jerusalem last night was inconclusive.

Irregularities came to light in connection with a IL2.4m. order placed by the Kidum company. Kidum, a coin dealing firm, claims that its order should have been filled at the rate which prevailed before July 1, 1976, when the Corporation raised its prices by 28 per cent.

At the time Avni took the side of Kidum, and recommended to the Board that the deal be concluded at the lower price. He presented his case to The Jerusalem Post last August.

Now it appears that Kidum's bank guarantee as surety for the execution of its order was received by the Corporation after its price rise, and that the date normally stamped on all mail received was adjusted and pre-dated to read June 29, 1976, so as to validate the order.

In fact, the bank guarantee was issued only at the end of July, making it impossible for it to have been received at the end of June. The Board of Directors cancelled the order a number of months ago and as of January 1, 1977, discontinued all contractual arrangements with Kidum.

The Jerusalem Post has recently received a number of angry letters from readers. One letter claims that as a result of the order, the Corporation lost a large sum of money. Two months later with the explanation that it had arrived too late and that the coins ordered had been sold out.

Another letter states that the writer ordered the Hannuka coin.

Hillel Seidel leaves ILP, expects to join the Likud

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT, Jerusalem Post Political Reporter

Knesset Member Hillel Seidel yesterday left the Independent Liberal Party. He expects to join the Likud.

Seidel rejected a demand by party leader Moshe Kol to give up his Knesset seat. He told The Jerusalem Post yesterday he had brought in more votes than required for one mandate.

Seidel had been a maverick in his party. He was in the minority when the leadership decided to remain in the government coalition and when it supported the "Sinai II" interim agreement. In a letter to Kol yesterday he wrote: "The ILP's views on economic and social issues are the most correct; but the party can't, at this time, influence the administration. That's why a bigger and more massive force is needed... Having the right ideas is not enough to introduce change in the country. A party must be strong, have character, vision and courage," he added.

Seidel told The Post that he believed the election campaign will be among big blocs — the Alignment, the Likud and the Democratic Movement for Change. The small parties must join a bloc, he argued.

Seidel's move comes as public opinion polls show the ILP will win only one seat in the coming elections, and possibly not even that. But he denied these polls had influenced his decision.

Contacts with the Liberal Party in the Likud bloc began about three weeks ago. Seidel said that Liberal leader Simcha Erlich had said to him: "The ILP is negotiating merger with everyone. Why not with us?" Seidel

Syrians expected to quit Nabatiya in a few days

By HIRSH GOODMAN, Jerusalem Post Military Reporter

ISRAEL IS EXPECTING Syria to withdraw its troops from Nabatiya within the next few days. It is thought in Jerusalem that agreement on this point will be reached at a meeting between Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and Syrian President Hafez Assad scheduled to take place in Damascus today.

Israel has made it explicitly clear to the Syrians, through the offices of the U.S., that no Syrian presence — no matter how limited or how seemingly non-threatening — will be tolerated at any point south of the Red Line.

The "Red Line" has been defined in detail to the Syrians, and is generally understood to run along or near the Litani River.

The reason for Israeli insistence that the Syrians withdraw is the distinct fear here that the sanctioning of even the smallest Syrian force would be interpreted as de facto legitimization of a situation which Israel has no intention of tolerating. It is also feared that the sanctioning of a limited force would soon lead to a creeping buildup of Syrian forces which would either necessitate drastic action or constitute a threat to this country's security.

It was learned yesterday that there has been no increase in the size of the Syrian presence in southern Lebanon and that no organized terrorist-leftist troops have entered the area. The Syrian involvement in the south continues to remain at the level of one battalion of infantry supported by a few armoured personnel carriers.

Some observers in Israel are convinced that the Syrian move was intended specifically as a test of Israel's resolve. This is also the opinion of several Lebanese Phalangists and other Christians who have reached the "Good Fence."

According to people who have spoken to the Christians, there is a growing feeling in southern Lebanon that the Syrians are using their role of peace-keeper as a cover for infiltration and entrenchment in the region. They noted that the Syrians have done little to curb the fighting which has broken out between Christians and leftists in the south, and that there is no evidence that pressure is being brought to bear on the Moslems to stop the hostilities.

However there are no obvious signs that the Syrians are building up a permanent military infrastructure in the country which could be used as a base for hostile action against Israel in the future.

Activity along the "Good Fence" returned to normal yesterday after, on Monday, several hundred workers stayed away from their jobs in

U.S.: Israel is playing it up

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — American officials, seeking to downplay the importance of the Syrian presence in southern Lebanon, are insisting that the Syrian troops are on the road north of Nabatiya, not actually in the town itself.

The Americans note that only 500 or so Syrian soldiers are involved and that they were dispatched to the region to protect Lebanese Christians threatened by Palestinian terrorists. The Syrian movement has the approval of the central Lebanese government headed by President Sarkis, the officials say.

The Americans are hoping that the controversy can yet be resolved quietly and are upset that the issue has been "played up" in the Israel media.

Some U.S. sources are saying that Israel is exaggerating the significance of the whole issue out of all proportion because the introduction of some 600 Syrian forces on the road to Nabatiya is not going to upset the overall balance of power in southern Lebanon.

These sources fear that the matter will become more difficult to resolve quickly, the more it is played up in Israel.

Peres: Clashes intended to justify Syrian presence

By YORAM HAMIZBAH, Jerusalem Post Reporter

MISGAV AM. — The recent clashes between Christians and leftist forces can be seen as an attempt by Palestinian elements and the remnants of the Lebanese Arab Army to create a pretext for the Syrian continued presence in the area. Defense Minister Shimon Peres said yesterday.

Asked by a reporter whether Israel is considering military action in the area, Peres said: "I see no point in promulgating along the border and spreading threats."

Asked if Israel was not going too soft a stance on the Syrian presence in Nabatiya, Peres said that the Government was following all the events in Nabatiya, but does not want to resort to any other methods before the diplomatic possibilities had been exhausted.

During his tour of the northern border Peres was accompanied by the O.C. Northern Command, Aluf Raphael Eitan. Eitan said it was not yet clear exactly who is fighting

Waldheim adds Saudia to tour

GENEVA. — UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim yesterday added Saudi Arabia to the itinerary of his Middle East peace mission beginning today, a UN spokesman said here.

Waldheim will arrive in Saudi Arabia next Sunday after visiting Egypt and Syria, and afterwards will go on to Lebanon, Jordan and Israel.

UN officials gave no reason for the inclusion of Saudi Arabia in Waldheim's programme. But they pointed out that, while not directly involved in the conflict with Israel, its views on a peaceful solution would carry considerable weight with the secretary-general.

Waldheim said on arrival here yesterday he would pay a second visit to Cairo to report on the prospects of reconvening the Geneva Middle East peace conference. (Reuters)

iro interior minister in 'limited' reshuffle

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Premier Menachem Begin's 32-man cabinet was reshuffled last night, with Interior Minister Shimon Peres taking over the portfolio of Agriculture.

Peres' appointment as Agriculture Minister was a surprise, as he had been in the cabinet since last March, when he replaced Moshe Nisim as Minister of Agriculture. Peres had held the portfolio for the past five years.

Meanwhile, Sadat and student leaders exchanged sharp remarks yesterday in an unprecedented discussion of the riots and the role of youth in public life.

Sadat described the riots, which the government blamed on communists, as "subversive uprising," but students insisted the disturbances were a "popular uprising" which some opportunists exploited.

Sadat met the students at his Nile retreat, 20 kms north of Cairo. The president had held similar discussions last weekend with university professors and labour leaders. But only the students declared virulent opposition to government policies. (AP, UPI)

rebuffs French attempt endorse PLO for Geneva

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A French attempt to secure European support for the European Liberation Organization ended here on Monday by members of the European Community, informed said yesterday.

Instead, the foreign ministers issued only a brief and general statement referring to the high priority to be given to the Middle East conflict and the need to take advantage of the present "favourable atmosphere" there.

Meanwhile, the Foreign Office has warned Said Hammami, the PLO representative in Britain, not to pretend that he enjoys official or diplomatic status here.

ASHDOD RESIDENTS CHARGE: Clouds of phosphate dust threaten our health

By YITZHAK OKED, Jerusalem Post Reporter

According to measurements by the Municipality's ecology unit, at a distance of 200 metres from the depot more than 58 tons per square kilometre of phosphate dust settle on the ground in one month. A kilometre away it is more than 17 tons; one and a half kilometres away it is more than 10 tons.

Ephraim Perry, principal of the Ort national vocational school which is 200 metres from the depot, told a press conference he has 250 children who live at the school. He fears the phosphate dust may harm their health and cause some of them to leave school. He also revealed that the school's electronic equipment, which cost millions of pounds, is being eaten away by phosphate dust. Other residents told of children

He claimed that the depot is in poor condition and asked that the phosphate company repair its conveyors and other equipment to hold down escaping dust. Another solution, he suggested, was to cease loading phosphates in the late afternoon and early evening, when the wind blows directly into town.

Residents are demanding that they be allowed to participate in the meetings that are now being held to plan the new depot to ensure that it will be ecologically safe. The committee threatens legal action and public demonstrations if its demands are not met.

$30,000 bilkers

NEW YORK. — Two Israeli brothers, one of whom was carrying more than $30,000 in cash, have been fined $10 each for trying to squeeze through a subway turnstile together on a single 50-cent fare.

"It was actually just a kind of joke," said Itzhak Raz, 28, of Queens, Raz and his brother Gabriel, 26, were arrested on Monday by transit police assigned to watch for turnstile cheats.

Itzhak Raz, a diamond dealer, was found to have $30,000 on his person when arrested. He said it was not unusual for a person in his line of work to carry large amounts of cash.

150,000 go to polls in Labour election

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT, Jerusalem Post Political Reporter

An estimated 150,000 Labour Party members went to the polls yesterday to elect delegates to the convention, which will itself nominate or elect a central committee to choose Labour's candidate for the premiership. However, judging from the comments of voters, they were not concerned with the competition between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Defence Minister Shimon Peres when they cast their ballots yesterday.

In addition to deciding on the candidate for the premiership, the convention, opening in Jerusalem on February 22, will draft the party's election platform.

The polls closed shortly before midnight, and a party spokesman said he expected 150,000 of the party's members will have voted. The large turnout was a surprise, he said.

The voters interviewed said they were concerned with local issues. "I want a major change in this branch. I believe it's dormant," Dr. Ellyahu Rosen told The Jerusalem Post at the Rasseco branch in Jerusalem.

Yehiel Levov, who voted at the Jaffa Road branch, said he voted for "the people I know and who are willing to help you and listen to you."

An employee of the Ministry of Communications, who asked not to be identified, said he voted for people "who are willing to do you a favour; not those who just want to get elected and are never seen again."

About 2,300 delegates were elected yesterday. Most of the 500 members of the outgoing central committee did not stand, at the request of the party's secretary-general, Meir Zarmi. But they have been invited to the convention and the delegates will decide whether to give them the right to vote.

Airport men get work orders; imports held up by customs

Flight controllers at Ben-Gurion Airport, who have been applying sanctions for some days, were ordered by the Tel Aviv District Labour Court yesterday to carry out normal work, Haaretz reports.

The flight controllers had claimed that they were not applying sanctions, but only "working by the book."

In Haifa, the Chamber of Commerce appealed to the Commerce Minister yesterday to make emergency arrangements for the clearing of vital imports from the port while the customs men continue their go-slow. Ya'acov Friedler reports.

The officials, who have been prevented from striking by emergency orders, have reduced their pace of work to little more than 10 per cent of their normal output, causing delays in the clearing of imports from the port.

Yesterday one factory, the Cable and Wire Company, stated that it would be forced to dismiss dozens of workers unless a cargo of raw materials which had arrived in the port could be cleared immediately.

A dispute involving the Marine Officers' Union was also reported from Haifa yesterday.

The union ordered the port pilots to prevent the sailing of one ship from each of the country's three ports and the Ashdod oil terminal to support a demand for unified basic pay for all masters and chief engineers employed on shore by the shipping companies, Transport Ministry and Port Authority.

Roadside report rules revised, writers resort to reminders

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Municipal inspectors in Jerusalem have been proving in the past week that the hand that issues parking tickets is connected to a human heart.

For some time, inspectors have been issuing hundreds of summonses a month to persons who displayed their parking tags on the driver's window, rather than on the window facing the sidewalk, as required by municipal by-law. The law was adopted in order to spare the inspectors the necessity of standing in the roadway to see if the tag is punched correctly. In the last two cases, inspectors were nearly hit by cars as they attempted to do precisely that.

At a recent meeting of the Municipal Executive, it was decided to ask inspectors, on an experimental basis, to write notes to such offenders instead of issuing tickets. The notes, left on the windshields, are handwritten. They point out the transgression and express the inspector's desire to avoid the necessity of issuing a summons in the future.

More than half a dozen telephone calls and letters have been received so far by the Municipality, from drivers expressing their surprise and delight at this human touch from an unexpected direction.

Bureaucracy stalemates Spassky's chess coach

Jerusalem Post Staff

If Boris Spassky fails to regain the world chess championship, he may have only Israel's labyrinthine bureaucracy to blame.

Ya'acov Morrey, 35, a well-known chess coach in Moscow who arrived in Israel as an immigrant three weeks ago, said yesterday that he had declined an invitation from Spassky to coach him for his battle to regain the title he lost to Bobby Fischer in Iceland in 1972.

He said Spassky's offer was "a great honour" which he was compelled to decline because he was in the midst of paper work concerning his settling in Israel. He also said he wants "to devote myself to developing Israeli chess."

Spassky is living in Paris. Later this month he returns to Iceland for a candidates' tournament. The winner will meet world champion Anatoly Karpov for a title contest.

Morrey lost his job in Moscow two years ago when he applied for an emigration visa. He said Spassky helped him through part of his hardships until his visa arrived.

The two civil defence soldiers take note of a poster — "We're not baby factories" — shown during a feminist protest on the abortion law in Jerusalem yesterday.

Feminists protest in Capital: Say abortion law too restrictive

By MARSHA POMERANTZ, Jerusalem Post Reporter

As some women protested against the liberality of the new abortion law passed by the Knesset on Monday, feminist organisations were claiming yesterday that the law is too restrictive.

In Jerusalem, feminists, carrying posters with slogans such as "We're not baby factories," gathered in the city centre and handed out leaflets calling for sex education for children and adults. They were joined by four men from a gathering group of spectators. The men took up signs urging "birth control techniques for men."

"A woman has the right to decide what to do with her own body," said one of the women at the demonstration, sponsored by the Jerusalem Feminists' League.

The new law does allow for abortions in cases where the birth "is liable to cause a woman or her children serious harm by virtue of the difficult situation prevailing in the woman's family, social milieu or surroundings." A committee, including a gynaecologist and social worker, must make the decision about an abortion now.

One of the women said that with the old anti-abortion law in force, police would "look the other way" to perform the operation — though not cheaply. Now, she claimed, about 80 per cent of the women wanting abortions would still not be able to get them legally because their social situation was not "bad enough."

They would seek illegal abortions, at prices vastly inflated for fear of fines.

An estimated 45,000 illegal abortions are performed each year, and the current price is reportedly IL2,000 or slightly higher.

Sagging aliya, burgeoning yerida, worries new and veteran MKs

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The U.S. seems to have become the new Zionist homeland, Likud-Liberal MK Zita Linker said yesterday in her maiden speech in the House.

Speaking at a debate on sagging immigration and burgeoning emigration, Mrs. Linker blamed the Government's own information policy for "allowing things to arrive at a point where Soviet emigres, instead of heading for the Jewish State, head for North America. The U.S., it appears, is now the destination of true Zionists," she declared.

Though Israel exists as a homeland for both persecuted and free Jews, it is not drawing them, she said. "And this is so because of the impure (social) atmosphere here and the Government's failure to offer prospective settlers a challenge."

Shlomo Gross (Tora Front) said only a "return to Jewish sources and the Law of Moses could effectively strengthen the ties between the State of Israel and Jews outside its borders."

Mapam's Yehuda Yudin thought otherwise. "What we need now to stem the tidal wave of emigration is more education in Zionism...for the identification of Jews abroad with the State of Israel will never be complete without adoption of the Zionist faith."

Soviet scientists: Help us fight for Jewish culture

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Six Soviet Jewish scientists in Moscow called Jewish Agency headquarters in Jerusalem at midnight on Monday asking world Jewry to support their fight to spread Jewish culture in Russia.

The message was read to 100 Israeli, American, European and South American members of a seminar on Soviet Jewish emigration and absorption in the Agency's Weizmann Hall. Those present had all attended the Brussels Conference on Soviet Jewry a year ago, at which the symposium was planned.

Absorption Minister Shlomo Rosen

urged the group to join his ministry and the Agency on a committee to delve into specific problems troubling Russian olim; to help "adopt" neighbourhoods and settlements where Russian Jews live; and to assist in the establishment of university courses for absorption workers.

According to a report reaching the New York conference on Soviet Jewry, prisoner of Zion Yaakov Suslensky, from the town of Bender, was released from Soviet prison after serving a seven-year term. Suslensky was sentenced for spreading anti-Soviet literature and what the Soviet authorities termed as intent to undermine the regime.

Canadian gov't won't audit T.A. firm's reactor sale

OTTAWA. — Canadian Auditor-General J.J. Macdonell said yesterday no useful purpose could be served by attempting to audit the books of the Tel Aviv company that was an agent in the sale of nuclear reactors to South Korea.

The Auditor-General (the Canadian equivalent of the State Comptroller) turned down the proposal that he go to Tel Aviv to check the company's books after the agent, United Developments Inc. (UDI) rejected his suggestions for a wide-ranging audit.

The Chairman of the Canadian Parliament's public accounts committee, now investigating the transaction through UDI, said the committee now faces the task of recommending to the house that action should be taken against those who entered into the contracts.

The committee is inquiring into a report from the Auditor-General that insufficient documentation exists to justify the expenditure of $10.8m. of the $17.8m. already paid to Israeli agents by Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. (AECL), a government-owned company. The total includes $2.1m. of the $16.4m. paid to UDI and $2.4m. paid into a Swiss bank account as a fee on a sale to Argentina. AECL says it doesn't know the name of the agent to the Argentine case's partner in the deal, Italian "won't tell."

The Israeli firm first had agreement giving it a $20m. flat fee selling the South Koreans a reactor but early last year part of the were made accountable as agents. The Auditor-General says enough evidence of the spending been provided.

The Tel Aviv company said in autumn it would like to have Canadian Auditor-General's books in Israel, but in a month it turned down Macdonell's suggestions of a detailed inquiry would include unrestricted access to documents and bank accounts. UDI and its affiliated company UDI's head, Shaul Eisenberg, his letter to Macdonell that an original agreement made his audit proposed was inappropriate. He added that the Auditor-General would have to be restricted to seeing only whether he for charges levied by UDI is reasonable.

"In light of Eisenberg's I am doubtful that UDI's could be audited effectively purpose intended," Macdonell the committee.

Yadlin back to lock-up

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Asher Yadlin, the suspended head of Kupat Holim, was returned to the Abu Kahir police lock-up yesterday.

Since the suicide of his close friend, the late Minister of Housing, Avraham Ofer, on January 4th, Yadlin has been in Beilinson Hospital with a gall bladder and heart complaint.

Friends of Yadlin said he was feeling better, but was still receiving treatment. Yadlin's trial, for bribery and fraud, is scheduled to begin in two weeks' time.

Zionist Panthers to join DMC

TEL AVIV. — The Zionist Panther movement has decided to merge with the Democratic Movement for Change, Zionist Panther leaders said yesterday.

The chairman of the Zionist Panthers, Victor Tassar, said the members of his movement would join the DMC on an individual basis. After a series of meetings with DMC leaders including Yigael Yadin, Meir Zorea and Amnon Rubinstein, the Zionist Panthers said that they had asked for no special conditions or places in the DMC Knesset list before joining the movement. But he added that Yadlin had told him it would be "a catastrophe" if no Jews of Oriental origin were elected to the Knesset on the DMC list.

Tassar stressed that the members of his movement would continue to fight against poverty and discrimination within the DMC. (Him)

Potato peddler suspected of pushing heroin

Jerusalem Post Staff

TEL AVIV. — A 24-year-old potato peddler from the Hatikva quarter was arrested on Monday evening on suspicion of dealing in heroin.

The man first aroused detectives' suspicions when they noticed that customers who came up to his potato cart frequently went away empty-handed. Some of these customers were known to the police as drug users.

A watch was kept and after several hours police observed that the peddler often left his cart to extract something from his nearby store.

When the police arrested suspect, they found several Israeli pounds in his possession more than the usual amount of money a potato peddler would have under the stone revenue stamps of heroin and 10 g of opium.

Police said they arrested the man on Monday who had 25 g of hashish in his possession. He was arrested on suspicion of possession of seven grams and 13 grams of heroin.

Tel Aviv district policeman, Nitzan Moshe, warned last week that dangerous drugs were in Tel Aviv alone; he said last week a 22-year-old man found lying in a pool of blood in Jaffa street. In the wake of the shooting, police have arrested suspected drug pushers.

Another heroin dealer, sentenced to six years in Tel Aviv District Court by Emanuel Nadav, 28, was found guilty of pushing the addicts.

According to the charges, Nadav went to Holland in last year and returned to Israel three days with 60 grams of heroin. He sold part of the heroin in two weeks before he was arrested. The prosecution said he sold in doses of 0.016 grams a price of IL700 a dose.

When police raided his house, Nadav claimed he had more than he is an addict and the grams were for his own use.

Rosen wants to unite his ministries

The most expensive, and troublesome problem faced by the immigrant — finding a flat — could be more easily solved if the Absorption and Housing Ministries were headed by a single minister, according to Shlomo Rosen, who is both Absorption Minister and Housing Minister.

The ministries could either be combined into one or remain separate, but the authority at the top must be in the hands of one person, he said in an interview with The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

This 71-year-old minister does not have himself in mind for the double job. "I'm not resigning, but I'm not fighting to get my job again," he says candidly. "I don't suppose I'll be a member of the next Cabinet."

Dispatched to the Housing Ministry a few weeks ago following the death of Avraham Ofer, Rosen spends several days a week at the ministry — with which his Absorption Ministry has often been at odds in recent years over the number of immigrant flats being provided. The new chair gives him a slightly different perspective in addition to providing immigrants with a place to live, the Government must also make sure that other groups have a chance for housing and that the building industry does not collapse under adverse economic conditions.

Rosen supports the belief of the Prime Minister and of the late Minister Ofer that the Housing Ministry should not only build homes, but develop complete neighbourhoods and settlements from start to finish.

Rosen agrees with Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek that cheap housing schemes in Beit Shemesh 30 kilometres from the capital have drawn young couples away from Jerusalem. He urges that "special means" be taken to establish Jerusalem as a development area with incentives for buying flats.

Discussion between the Treasury and the Housing Ministry will proceed soon, and Rosen hopes some progress will be made before the elections.

Housing Ministry spokesman Yehuda Leif said yesterday that the ministry will shortly "give positive consideration" to plans to provide more attractive mortgages to help young couples acquire apartments in Jerusalem.

In addition, said Rosen, schemes to populate under-settled areas, now in operation in Acre and Beit Shemesh, should be promoted in other towns such as Carmiel in the Galilee.

Appearing at work by 7 a.m., Minister Rosen is trying to become familiar with the operations of his new ministry (Cabinet members with two portfolios, he notes with a smile, do not get two salaries or any extra allowance.) "The ministry is very complex — I can't say that I know it home here already."

Digging deep into Jewish family trees

TEL AVIV. — Have you ever wondered who your great-great-grandfather was?

Well, if Dr. Yitzhak Halbrecht has his way all Jews may be able to trace their family ancestry, hopefully at least to the fifth generation.

Is it snobbish?

Not at all says Dr. Halbrecht, a professor emeritus at Tel Aviv University, who is director of the Institute for Research on Jewish Families and Communities. The two-year-old organization will hold its first public symposium at B'nai B'rith House here at 7 p.m. tomorrow.

The World Jewish Congress and the Jewish Agency have promised to give financial aid for the project.

Among the groups which have offered to cooperate are World Orti, the Frenob Wizo Federation, Jewish organizations in Mexico, France and the U.S., and the Israel Defence Forces.

Dr. Halbrecht says the institute plans to send questionnaires to Jews all over the world to try to trace their family trees.

The institute wants to arouse the same popular interest in Jewish genealogy as there is in archaeology in Israel.

"We believe that when a child asks who his great grandfather was, then he will also become interested in his moral and spiritual heritage," Dr. Halbrecht says. "If a child learns that his great grandfather was a

TA Maccabi hoopsters surrender lead to kibbutz

Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter
Four days after their historic victory over Real Madrid in the European Cup, Tel Aviv Maccabi suffered a 98-84 defeat at the hands of Israeli cup holders Givat - Yagur Hapoel in Tuesday night's second round games of the National Basketball League.

In other League games Ramat Gan Hapoel beat Haifa Maccabi in Tel Aviv 111-86; Tel Aviv Hapoel came out on top against Afeka Hapoel, also in Tel Aviv, 106-82; Tel Aviv Elitzur crushed Givat Brenner's Na'an Hapoel 90-72 at Be'erot Itzhak, and Ramat Gan Maccabi beat South Tel Aviv Maccabi, 94-67 in Tel Aviv.

Still riding the emotional high generated by their dramatic victory over Real Madrid last Thursday, the League champions travelled to Haifa to face the cup holders and were confident they could come away with a win.

They should have checked with the kibbutzniks representing Gvat - Yagur Hapoel, however, because they had other things on their mind. Playing a tight one defence and getting excellent leadership from team playmaker Itamar Marel, the team from the North led virtually the whole way in handing the perennial champions their second defeat in the League this year.

The situation at the top now has three teams with two losses each, and the bottom team, Gvat - Yagur and Ramat Gan Hapoel square off next week in Tel Aviv.

For now the spotlight belongs to Marel and his teammates, Boaz Mizrahi, the centre who turned in his usual steady offensive games scoring 20 points, or Goren, like Yana'i a national team player, who scored 20 points, including seven for eight shooting from the field in the first half, and Gaby Telshner and Itzhak, who both scored 14 and did a great job under both baskets.

The Maccabees, who have dropped the second place, got scoring from Ben-Zion Lou Silver (24 points) and Jim Boatwright (19), but could never get enough momentum to overcome the determined local side.

Gvat - Yagur's next opponents Ramat Gan Hapoel raced to a 10-point halftime lead against Haifa Maccabi and were slowed down in the second half before they could come up with their 111-88 victory. For the Ramat Gan team, 51 out of their total 111 points were scored by their front-line men. Centre Steve Schacter led the way with 38 points followed by forwards Steve Kaplan with 30 and Ronnie Lang, 28. For the visitors Gaby Neumark was tops with 28.

Ramat Gan will have to sharpen up their performance if they are to beat Gvat - Yagur in next week's showdown for first place.

Tel Aviv Hapoel rebounded from last week's upset at the hands of Givat - Yagur to Na'an Hapoel by running their way to a 106-82 victory over visiting Afeka Hapoel. Young Pinhas Hoses was the star of the game, scoring 27 points and rebounding exceptionally well under both baskets.

Tel Aviv Elitzur was at home against Givat Brenner - Na'an Hapoel and did not give the kibbutzniks a chance to get started. From the 6th minute with the score tied at 10, the home team went out to a 10 point edge at halftime and led by 20 most of the second half. Especially effective for the victors was 2.03 metres Jonathan Zaka who scored 20 points mostly around the basket. Oded Ginden, back from an injury, led the losers with 24 points.

In a game involving teams from the bottom of the League, Ramat Gan Maccabi surprised South Tel Aviv Maccabi, 90-81, gaining revenge for an earlier 100-79 defeat they suffered at the beginning of the season. Joseph Leja continued to be the key man for the winners, this time scoring 37 points as well as playing his usual fine defensive game. The losers were paced by Abraham Haimmo's 19 points.

Haifa Hapoel knocked out of State Cup soccer

Post Sports Reporter
TEL AVIV.—Shaarayim Maccabi, 2nd Division team, suffered a 2-0 defeat in the first round of the State Cup games yesterday by losing First Division Haifa Hapoel 3-1.

Other National League teams included into the last sixteen of the competition, Beersheba Hapoel beat Tel Yehuda 5-0. Netanya Maccabi beat Azur Hapoel, of the "C" league, in the same score. Tel Aviv Maccabi did hard work of beating Netanya 2-0, and Petah Tikva Maccabi beat Peta Tikva Hapoel 1-0.

A Jacky Sharaby header in the 14th minute put Shaarayim on the road to victory. Uri Shuck beat three Haifa defenders in a solo effort in the 18th minute before shooting in from 12 metres, and in the 56th minute the home side were 3-0 in the lead but a hard low shot from Eli Ahalyeh. Yohanan Wallach pulled a back kick for Haifa a minute before the end.

Yehuda Yefet was the Tel Aviv Maccabi hero. Brought into the line-up in the 56th minute from the reserves bench, he went on to score both Maccabi goals.

Beersheba goals were scored by Shalom Avitan, 2nd Division, 2-0, two, and Ben Barad, Ehud Ben Tovim missed a couple of great chances for Beni Yehuda.

Netanya Maccabi's 5-0 win was not a true reflection of the run of play, as fifth division Azur made a game of it. The Netanya goals were scored by Garlan, 2, Spiegler (penalty), Machness and David Lavie (penalty), who returned to the Netanya attack after a long absence due to injury.

It was a hard fought derby cup tie in Petah Tikva, where a header by Avi Golder in the 82nd minute clinched Maccabi's passage to the next round. There was little in it between the teams, and Maccabi were fortunate to hold off a late Hapoel rally, during which Remler headed in what appeared like an equaliser only to have the goal disallowed for an earlier infringement.

Brooklyn pair frozen in flat Panic buying, looting as new storm hits U.S.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK. — National Guard troops yesterday battled to keep roads open to this city of half a million as unrelenting snowstorms, sub-zero temperatures and gales reduced it to a virtual ghost town.

With many shops out of essentials after panic buying and food shortages getting worse, police reported looting and a six-fold increase in burglaries.

Local government official Edward Reagan described the situation as "disaster in every sense of the word" in a city where more than three times the normal amount of snow has fallen in America's worst winter this century.

The arctic conditions have thrown two million Americans out of work and economists have predicted further increases in both unemployment and inflation as a result of the bitter weather.

The worst-hit states, including Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and New York, are still digging out from weekend blizzards which killed about 40 people.

In New York City, the frozen corpsus of an 80-year-old woman and her 77-year-old brother were found in their ice-cold home in Brooklyn.

In Washington, the U.S. Senate on Monday passed up debate on long-term energy problems and approved emergency legislation 91-2 to spread more evenly the burden of energy crises.

The bill — essentially that recommended by President Carter — authorizes emergency purchases of natural gas and grants authority to force interstate pipelines to share supplies with each other.

Nearly 61,000 auto workers were idled in eight states and Canada Monday because of the frigid winter.

Chicago was in its 38th unbroken day of freezing weather. Temperatures neared minus 17C in Chicago early Monday and the National Weather Service said January was the coldest month in the city's history.

Europeans, meanwhile, are having a normal winter — with a few cold snaps and a few mild spells. No fuel shortages or abnormal disruptions of life have been reported. (Reuters)

Carter meets Dobrynin

WASHINGTON. — President Carter yesterday held his first meeting with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin and said: "I hope to have a close relationship with you and with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev."

"I've heard great things about you and your service here in Washington."

The President had invited the Ambassador to the White House to talk about U.S.-Russian relations and the possibility of improving them in some specific areas.

Carter, who believes East-West "detente" is a valid goal, has said on several occasions he has received messages both privately and publicly from Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev, signaling hope of improving relations.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance already has met several times with Dobrynin on ways to resume the Strategic Arms Limitation talks.

Vance also plans a visit to Moscow in March for discussions on arms reductions and a possible nuclear test ban — two goals high on Carter's list.

The President's day focused heavily on foreign affairs. He also had a morning meeting with Vance and members of the Senate Foreign Relations and House International Affairs committees. Assistant Secretary of State J. William Foster said the purpose was to discuss upcoming legislation in the foreign policy and national security fields, and to demonstrate Carter's desire for consultation.

At a cabinet meeting on Monday, Carter was critical of Henry Kissinger for using two or even three planes on his foreign trips and having his armoured limousine flown abroad. (AP, UPI)

U.S. official apologizes to Nader, Arabs

WASHINGTON. — Federal Trade Commissioner Paul Rand Dixon yesterday issued an apology to Arab-Americans — with a copy to consumer activist Ralph Nader — for derogatory remarks made about Nader's Arab background.

"I deeply regret a remark I made in the course of expressing my disagreement with Mr. Nader which could be interpreted as a derogatory reference to Mr. Nader's ethnic background, or to others of Arab descent," Dixon said in a letter to the National Association of Arab-Americans.

The group had demanded an apology after reports surfaced that Dixon had referred to Nader as "a son-of-a-bitch" and a "dirty Arab" in a speech last month to the Grocery Manufacturers of America.

"I did not intend to convey any such meaning, and I apologize to all who are concerned for having made the remark in question," Dixon said in the letter.

Dixon said in the letter that "in response to questions from the audience, I made a statement which was intended to reflect my strong disagreement with certain past writings and activities of Mr. Ralph Nader."

Earlier, Dixon said he "meant no harm to Arabs" when he called Nader "dirty" and a "lying S.O.B."

Dixon said Nader had asked him with a 1969 report on the FTC compiled by "Nader's Raiders," a group of crusading public interest lawyers who investigated the commission. The group recommended Dixon as chairman.

"I'm not a great admirer of Mr. Nader. He has malignancy about him," Dixon said, calling Nader "a master of dirty tricks." (UPI)

Britain's miners win right to retire at 60

LONDON. — Britain's miners yesterday accepted the National Coal Board's early retirement offer, avoiding the threat of a nationwide strike.

The Miners Union voted last year to authorize its leaders to call strike if they thought it was necessary. The union's demands were for retirement at age 60 in 1978.

The Coal Board's deal, which miners accepted with 55 per cent approval, establishes retirement at 60 next year, with retirement at 60 by 1979. (UPI)

Congressman jailed

WASHINGTON. — With a warning other U.S. public officials who enter the same thing, a Federal Judge Monday sentenced a former U.S. Congressman to serve at least 18 months in prison for accepting kickbacks from two men on payroll.

Former U.S. Representative James Hastings, of New York, began his 20-month to five-year sentence without parole.

Hastings was convicted December 17 by a jury of 20 counts of mail fraud and eight counts of making statements to the House Finance Committee as part of the kickback scheme. (AP)

U.S. spy trial opens

LOS ANGELES. — Two men accused of giving the Soviet Union secret information about U.S. rockets, pleaded innocent on Monday to charges of conspiracy to deliver secret documents.

Andrew Lee, 28, of California, was indicted last week by a Federal Grand Jury which alleged that he passed secrets from TRW Incorporated, the Redondo Beach aerospace firm where Boyce worked, to a Soviet espionage attaché in Mexico City.

The FBI said the men received least $17,500 for the information. They face possible life imprisonment or the death penalty. (UPI)

CAIRO. — Egyptian security authorities have foiled an "attempt" to "wreck the Egyptian economy" by flooding the market with forged banknotes, the semi-official daily "Al-Ahram" said yesterday.

Six Sinai bedouin were caught while trying to circulate 15,000 Egyptian pounds (about 11,330,000 in U.S. dollars, the paper said. (AP)

Suarez cabinet meets as more violence looms

MADRID. — The Cabinet of Premier Adolfo Suarez yesterday held its second crisis meeting within four days to deal with the political violence that claimed 10 lives last week.

A communique issued after the cabinet meeting said Interior Minister Rodolfo Martin Villa reported on the police investigations, the arrests, arms controls and deportation of foreigners involved in extremist activities.

No new anti-terrorist measures were announced, but a regular cabinet meeting was called for Friday.

Detectives traded shots with unidentified gunmen early on Monday in the Madrid working class suburb of Canillejas, the national news agency Cifra said. It said the suspects escaped and there were no known injuries.

The latest messages from the "Anti-Fascist Resistance Group October 1 (Grapo)" threatened new kidnappings and attacks if the government does not release all of Spain's remaining 171 political prisoners.

Grapo has already abducted two leading government figures and claimed responsibility for the assassination on Friday of three policemen.

Those killings were the latest of a series that left 10 persons dead in a week.

One message from Grapo said that if the government does not release the political prisoners, "We will continue capturing regime figures — there is no other way to make the government see reason." Grapo promised to return "blows for blows."

Meanwhile, the government plans to expel five Italian rightists from Spain and has prepared a restricted invitation list for the official funerals today of three policemen slain by terrorists in Madrid.

The expulsions follow the ouster of seven Argentines last week and the indictment of an Argentine rightist and a Cuban in connection with the pistol slaying of a student during a Madrid demonstration. (CIP, AP)

Prague calls Charter 77 'illegal'

PRAGUE. — Czechoslovak authorities declared the "Charter 77" of the dissident civil rights campaigners illegal in what appeared a turning point in an open confrontation now in its fourth week.

The general prosecutor's office told the Charter's two main spokesmen, former Foreign Minister Jiri Hajek and philosopher

Jan Patocka, that the Charter and activities associated with it were a breach of Czechoslovak law.

Meanwhile the Communist Party newspaper "Rude Pravo" yesterday accused Western politicians and officials of interfering in Czechoslovakia's internal affairs by expressing concern over the fate of dissidents in Czechoslovakia.

Mission ends in failure for Richard

LUSAKA. — British negotiator Ivor Richard left Africa yesterday after his Rhodesia mission failed to prevent a sharpening of the conflict between the factions vying for control over that country's future.

When Richard started the six-month tour in Lusaka a month ago, Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda told him he had embarked on a "Mission Impossible", a prophecy that came true.

The aim of the mission was to narrow the gap between blacks and whites sufficiently to reconvene the deadlocked Geneva conference, of which Richard is chairman.

Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith totally rejected Richard's proposal that a British Resident Commissioner should oversee a black majority Interim Government and National Security Council to effect the switch from white to black rule. The mission's breakdown was compounded last weekend when the Patriotic Front nationalist leaders snubbed Richard by refusing to meet him. (Reuters, AP)

Freed woman anthropologist praises Libya, but evasive about role of France

TRIPOLI. — French anthropologist Francoise Claustre made her first public appearance yesterday after being freed this week by rebels in Chad, and fought back tears when asked if she felt she had been abandoned by her own government in her three-year ordeal.

Mrs. Claustre, 39, kept her praise for Libya and its leader, Muammar Gaddafi, who announced her release after negotiations with the Chad Liberation Front (Frolinat).

Asked at a news conference whether she felt the French Government had abandoned her, she said: "Listen. At the moment, in this present circumstances, only the spokesman of the French Government can reply to that question."

"I can only tell you of what I know, what I saw, what Libya did for me."

Soon afterwards Mrs. Claustre, who was flanked by her husband Pierre and the leaders of the Chad rebel movement, fell silent. Sadness clouded her face and she bit her lips to emotion.

The rebels had demanded arms from France in return for Mrs. Claustre. Her husband, frustrated at the slow pace of negotiations tried to bring the rebels arms himself, but was also taken hostage, a year ago.

After Mrs. Claustre, the leader of the Chad rebels, Goukouni Oueddei launched into a scathing attack on France's support of this was what had motivated the kidnapping of Mrs. Claustre.

Mrs. Claustre also told reporters that the conditions in which I found myself for almost three years changed a lot. First, I was never in the same place, then at certain times I was only in the company of one or a few (rebel fighters.

"At other times I was fortunate enough to be in contact with the local population. It was during these moments that I was able to appreciate the Toubous (the rebel tribe).

"As a woman my Toubou friends were very welcoming and very well understood my distress, and I tried as best I could to integrate myself to their family way of life."

"But of course this was not always possible, given the war situation... I was often very far away (from inhabited centres), hidden in valleys or among rocks."

"In order to try to forget my situation I read a little and I learnt Toubou as best I could. I took part in the small chores of daily life of the village, women, and I taught some French to the children, who also taught me some of their language." (Reuters)

New Paris art centre: King Kong of culture?

By JIM HOAGLAND, The Washington Post

PARIS. — The Georges Pompidou National Centre of Art and Culture lumbered to life here Monday night in a ceremony marked by pomp and pushing, and cries of outrage over its extravagant and provocative architecture.

Rising out of a Paris slum like a giant, expensive mechanical toy that has gone berserk and taken over two city blocks, the Pompidou Centre glorifies the machine age. It is in itself a machine of the late 20th century more than a museum to house the art of today and inspire the creations of the future.

Pompidou proposed that double mission for an Arts centre in 1972, two years before his death, in hopes that the cultural palace would help Paris regain the dominant position it once held in the art world.

The modern art museum that is the heart of the complex does well in showing off the modest collection of 20th century art that successive French governments have acquired, usually without any great enthusiasm.

But at its birth the centre seems to be entering a future already taken. Its aesthetics, economics and environment are a final statement of an era of faith in unlimited growth and technological benevolence.

About 5,000 guests drawn from France's arts bureaucracy, its political leaders and its lost Paris turned out Monday night for the formal opening of the centre presided over by Pompidou's successor, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

Swept in by limousine past the nearby demolished meat and vegetable markets that formed Zola's "Belly of Paris," Les Halles, Princess Grace of Monaco, General Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire, Senegal's Leopold Senghor and the Grand Duke of Luxembourg were among a varied cast of foreign leaders on hand to help Giscard celebrate the opening.

The art beneath banks of blazing lights that cast dazzling images through the glass walls and over the polished steel struts that criss-cross the centre's facade.

The centre, its 16,200 square metres distributed across six floors midway between Les Halles and Le Marais on a small plot known as Beaubourg, an ironies moment on the seedy, dank and low-bourgeois of this area.

The $200m. project, which takes $28m. dollars a year to operate is intended to help shift the centre of gravity of Paris away from the Champs Elysees and Opera area Les Halles, the true geographic centre of the city.

The glittering inaugural brought a churning, wild finish to a relatively brief but often past gestation of the centre, which been a cause of French criticism of its "architectural King Kong."

The east facade is a forest of smokestacks, pipes and towers painted in enamel, white, primary red, blue and green hues.

These are the entrails of a buildings — the heating, air conditioning, water and electrical systems. But the architects, Renzo Piano and England's Richard Rogers, have externalized the systems to leave the centre's interior free-wheeling and open.

The centre's playful nature, enhanced by a permanent collection of Jean Tinguely mobiles on plaza, has not assuaged the fear the neighbourhood's residents, recall that Pompidou was a Paris real estate speculator as well as a spread across 35 rooms forms movable walls that can be shuffled endless combinations are the 1 paintings that form the permanent collection of the National Museum of Modern Art, formerly housed in derelict and temporary quarters near the Trocadero. The east date from 1905.

Also united are a 350,000 volume public library, the first serious of Paris; a small cinema where classics will be shown; a research centre headed by Jean Boulez; a small theatre, where new play by Eugene Ionesco staged Monday night, and a industrial design centre intended emphasize man's relationship to tools and machines around him.

U.S. using 'Yugoslav connection' for business contacts in Iraq

NICOSIA. — Yugoslavia is providing U.S. firms with a backdoor to business in Iraq and other anti-Western Arab countries.

To enter Iraq, U.S. firms team up with Yugoslav companies, providing advanced technology and equipment that the Yugoslavs often lack.

An American official noted that the Yugoslavs are favoured in Iraq as socialists with a good reputation for honest cost-accounting, and competence in civil engineering.

Pete Hale, director of the commerce action group for "Near East Business," said that the Yugoslavs are well established in markets Iraq, Algeria, Tunisia, Syria, other countries where U.S. firms have limited access.

Iraq broke off diplomatic relations with the U.S. after the Six Day War in protest against alleged U.S. collusion with Israel against the Arabs.

Cooperation with Yugoslavia will enable American companies boost their exports to Iraq by $1 $100m. a year during the next years.

Iraqi sources said American firms already are involved in contracts totalling more than $1b. in Iraq.

Politicians public profile plummets

LONDON. — Politicians are out. They are barely accepted socially in intelligent circles. If they do venture among their betters, they are apt to be bullied, ragged at the dinner table as if they were escaped convicts caught by a flock of starlings. It is rapidly becoming a question of "would you want your daughter to marry one?"

Now this is not a grand tour d'horizon of the world's democracies and of their patronising contempt for their own once sacred machinery. But it applies in varying degrees to all countries where they have elected assemblies, new or old.

In Britain, there have always been hard words for the opposition. But never before have the various mecs — in the street, in the pub, in the pew, at the work bench, in the club, behind the wheel, up on the roof or down in the mine and all their female partners or equivalents — oever had the general feeling of being so dismissive of their elected representatives.

As for the leaders whose solemn duty it is to "advise the Queen," i.e. run the country, you would find it hard to get a good word for any of them — with the possible exception of one for the Education Secretary in the present Labour Government.

Politics, says veteran newsman PATRICK O'DONOVAN, bores the British these days. His observations may be of interest to Israelis, now being subject to ordeal by election.

Mrs. Shirley Williams — from connoisseurs of political integrity.

There is no virtue in this. It is not a sign of sophistication. The Greeks evolved the word "idiot" and it meant simply a private man, one who took no interest in politics.

In Britain, according to the pollsters, it is now widely accepted that the reality of power lies with the trade union leaders. These in their turn are seen as subject not to the will of the majority of their membership, but to that of their hard core activists.

The activists inside and outside the unions, whether they be of the extreme Left or Right, the new nationalists too of course, have this in common, they all despise the individuals, the system, the rituals that compose government and the upper reaches of the law and, often, of the Church. But these addicts and activists are of their nature a minority.

The middle classes who, at least proportionately, have suffered most from the crisis of capitalism, have all but opted out. You could just now blow their sullen smoke into any sort of flame. The mass of the skilled and unskilled workers who do not bother with union elections feel almost as detached — except when their immediate interests are concerned.

The whole world, including the Vatican, has at present a curiously leaderless look. It may be an accident. It is certainly not the function of a democracy to throw up great leaders. Britain was fortunate in the nineteenth century. In this century's two World Wars it produced Lloyd George and Winston Churchill. Maybe the nation has for a while expended its ration of greatness.

But this crisis, and particularly Britain's deadly version of it, is a slow and creeping thing. It is not the sort that summons up loberent greatness, either among the politicians or within the nation. The political commentators bravely continue their dissection of the "leaders," but it is an intellectual, almost reflex action. They have to use a good deal of mockery to collect an audience. Politicians cannot collect audiences at all. No one really expects them to solve problems. Few are expecting a man or a white horse to save the economy. The British are keeping their heads down and waiting it out.

Of course a dramatic economic turn for the better or the worse might get the political adrenalin flowing again. But there is no certainty of that.

The future will look back at this period as a time of bottomless boredom. But boredom with politics does not engender a sense of crisis. It is of its nature soporific.

Yet long nights do end. And sleeping beauty does awake. The only question is when. It is not from what sort of Prince is going to wake up this vast and slightly seedy sleeper? (Otns)

Painter from Eilat has show in Berlin

SHEILA MELTZER / Post Correspondent

EILAT — An exhibition of paintings by an Eilat painter went on display abroad for the first time last month.

The painter is Aviva Dekel and her work is being exhibited at the Volksgalerie in West Berlin. It was the Six Day War that brought Aviva, her husband Arish (better known by his nickname Daks) and their then two small children to Eilat. Daks was a successful welder and building contractor when the war broke out but six months later, when he was finally released from the army, he found himself without a business and with half a million pounds worth of debts. Declaring himself bankrupt, he came down to Eilat and began working by day as a welder, by night he ran the popular Red Rock Nightclub. (He had for many years been one of the popular duo at the Haifa Theatre Club, in the days when his friends Haim Topol and Yoel Sana were just beginning their careers.)

Haifa-born Aviva arrived to join him on their 11th wedding anniversary, and with her typical efficiency she set up house and found herself a job at the Queen of Sheba Hotel. With Aviva's salary helping out the household budget, Daks decided to give up his daytime welding to devote all his energy to running the nightclub which had become Eilat's central after-dark attraction.

Aviva found herself facing long lonely evenings. Always practical (she makes her own clothes, cuts her own hair, is a perfect housewife and a marvelous cook) Aviva decided to decorate their new home by painting some pictures herself. She started with the subjects she knew best, the children, the family dog and the cat, and as she finished one picture she found herself eager to start another.

As she went on, she found that her paintings were developing surrealistic elements and overtones. "It was the surrealistic atmosphere of Eilat at that time that was coming out in my work without any direction on my part," she explains. The sea, the mountains, the sky and the rocky shoreline started to dominate her works, all of which, however, had an element of yearning for freedom, whether it was a small window showing the sky or an otherwise completely closed room, or the shackles that chained the half-human half-birds that started to people her later work.

In 1971 Aviva had her first exhibition, in Eilat. She showed 13 large portraits, all realistic. "Not one was sold," she remembers. "But people started coming home to see my work and began to buy." At Rosh Hashana 1973 she had a successful one-man show at Eilat's Municipal Gallery, and gave up her job to paint full-time. In 1975 she exhibited in Haifa and last year in Tel Aviv.

Last summer Daks and Aviva met Naftali Shoenberg, a former Israeli now living in Berlin who was in Eilat checking the possibilities of arranging charter flights from Germany. It was only when they invited him home for a drink that he discovered Aviva's paintings and that she learnt he is a partner in the Volksgalerie. Very enthusiastic, he took photos of Aviva's work back to Berlin and within a week called to fix the date for her first international exhibition.

The Patty Hearst mystery — on stage

VICTORIA RADIN / Otns

... and Patty as SLA's Tanya (AP photos)

LONDON. — In an age where you can make a film contract with a condemned murderer, produce three times about Eilat, six months later, and generally convert any romancing actually into instant entertainment, it is curious that Patty Hearst has been overlooked.

Patty's story has everything: tolerance, money, youth, love, feminism, the forces of the Left, the forces of the Right, unswerving conspiracy and even a madman. If God hadn't invented it, no one could have reasonably done so.

At the centre of all this is theigma of Patty herself — and, undoubtedly, a very confused, sad tale, that was really going on when she was performing so apparently awesomely to her captors' demands? How did she feel about the death of the onld Defreeze, the leader of the onldhese Liberation Army and or purported lover? And — especially — how could she, after her initial sercenes, react on all that?

Now a new play has opened in London that proposes to solve the mystery, or at least to offer an "examination of the nature of her conversion after her kidnapping," according to its subtitle. "Patty Hearst" is a one-hour play written by William

Tanner, an Australian who came to Britain by way of South Africa. Tanner is the author of "Dustlands," a highly successful documentary play about the assassination of Hendrik Verwoerd, the South African Prime Minister, which was produced in London last year. But Patty's is more of a psychological than a political drama.

Tanner's thesis seems to be that Patty Hearst is — or was then — a creature of instinct but little intellect. Before her kidnapping she was a spoiled, wilful girl who was using her fiancé, Stephen Weed, as a means of getting back at her parents. With Defreeze she met her match, and her conversation was the result.

This is undoubtedly a part of the truth, but not all of it. Patty Hearst was in fact kidnapped from the Berkeley apartment she shared with Weed. Tanner has her abducted from the drawing room floor of the Hearst family mansion, where she had been seducing Weed. "Ob no — not here," cries Weed.

With such a lover, how could Patty not fall for the masterful Defreeze? Defreeze, in Joseph Charles' portrayal, is a man to follow, but the play offers Patty no other options. Mother is a fanatical Catholic who she hysterically as she ransacks her handbag for tranquillisers. Father is a stuffed shirt out of P.O. Wedgehouse. As for Weed, Robert Longdon portrays him as the most witless beast ever to slouch halfway to Mammon.

Obviously, Tanner, with a little help from the SLA, is out to annihilate the lot of them; and the fact that they're the American upper class seems to give him added ammunition. But to destroy them successfully, we need to understand the SEX — for which a few black slogans, words about deprived black childhoods, and noisy machine-gun volleys at the audience will not do.

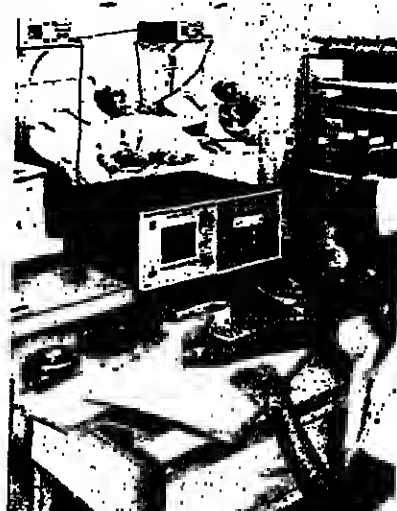

Patty is played by Rebyn Goodman, a New York actress who tries hard but looks, in this farce, rather like a nice girl from New York who has a way with muggers.

The mystery remains unresolved. And this is despite Tanner's attempts to graft on to it a wholly gratuitous mystery, the "Rosebud" imagery of "Citizen Kane," which is a whiteb transfigured into the real roses Defreeze offers Patty as reward for her marksmanship, or sprouts from the lips of Randolph Hearst with Attic doom.

"The rosebud remains always," he says. And so will Patty. And, I suspect, her mystery.

A DOCTOR'S NOTEBOOK / Dr. David Samson

Unnecessary heartache

Monitoring devices in cardiac ward: Every chest pain does not lead to hospitalization.

be expected to be working harder than usual.

As I talked with Avraham, I carried out a physical examination, finishing off by measuring his blood pressure and doing an electrocardiogram while he was at rest and after a standard amount of exercise. "Well, is it my heart-doctor?" he asked me apprehensively.

"No, I'm pretty sure it's not, but it could be your stomach, or more accurately, your oesophagus that's causing all the trouble."

"My stomach—how could that be the cause of the pain?" he asked incredulously. "I thought that pain in the chest was almost always due to heart trouble, and if not that, then due to the lungs."

"That's not really the case. Disease of the heart or lungs can certainly be responsible for chest pain, but there are many other, less serious causes. Reflux of acid stomach contents into the oesophagus is one. Your story rather suggests that, so I'm going to order an X-ray of the upper part of your digestive tract to find out more exactly what's going on there." I gave Avraham a prescription for tablets which I knew would help counteract the acidity in his stomach and discourage the regurgitation, which I thought was occurring. To the same end, I gave him some dietary advice and told him to avoid certain postures which favour reflux taking place.

When I received Avraham's X-rays, they showed that he had a hiatus hernia, a type of laxity at the upper end of the stomach, which enhances regurgitation of the sort I had mentioned to him, especially when the stomach is rather full. The radiologist had been able to demonstrate this while taking the X-rays, and this was certainly enough evidence to explain Avraham's recent upsets.

Not every hiatus hernia, however, produces symptoms, and, of course there is nothing to prevent chest pain arising from another cause, even when a hiatus hernia does exist. But with Avraham the negative findings of the examination, together with the substantial relief he obtained from my treatment and advice, really ruled out the possibility of what had been worrying him most, some sort of heart trouble.

When I last saw Avraham at my office, he was looking much happier, because his symptoms had all but disappeared. He was, however, just been promoted at work. There is good evidence to suggest that stress can contribute to the causation of some types of stomach upsets, so I told him that it would be wise of him to try and leave problems with his work at the tax office and not to bring them home.

Pain in the chest is a symptom which should never be ignored. It is always worthwhile consulting your doctor about it. In most cases, a fairly simple cause will be found to explain it. Much needless worry will then be prevented.

Dr. Samson regrets that he is unable to enter into any private correspondence in connection with this column. Readers' comments, however, may be used as a basis for future articles in the series.

RACHEL TEACHER

IN MEMORIAM

Passing of a pioneer

ANOTHER chapter in the history of the re-settlement of this country came to a close with the death a month ago at the venerable age of 98 of Rachel Teacher.

Mrs. Teacher was the last of the original group of British Zionists who, in 1913, founded the First London Ahuzah Co., Ltd. which bought land at Karkur where its members would live with their families, each on his own estate. The first settlers came soon after World War I, the other shareholders waiting in Britain till the area was prepared for more families. The Teachers arrived in 1930 when, after many disappointments, wells had been found enabling the settlers to start planting.

Karkur, which almost joins Pardes HaCana, is today a flourishing little village, with two schools, shikunim for new immigrants, clubs, and plenty of work in the surrounding groves and factories.

But in the 1930's, life was hard and primitive — no roads, no bus service, only a trek on foot or maybe on a donkey. However since water had been found, the settlers watched the trees growing in the orange groves and dreamed of a happy future when their produce would make them, if not rich, then comfortable.

But those were also the days of the Arab riots, and the Teacher family and their neighbours saw their groves go up in flames. Many left the village, but not the Teachers. Undaunted by the loss of all their savings, they opened a cafe which soon became the social centre of the little community. It also attracted the British soldiers in the nearby army camp, who soon got to know where they could get a good cup of English tea and eggs and chips.

There was also an open-air cinema attached to the cafe, both of which Mrs. Teacher ran alone after her husband became bedridden. When he died in 1954, she came to live with her daughter in Haifa.

Rachel Teacher was one of the real pioneers, who made a go of life here despite great privation and hardship, without the help of Jewish Agency loans, immigrant rights or upstart money.

Many old people have reason to be grateful to her, for it was the persistent efforts on her behalf of her son-in-law, David Freeman, that brought the National Insurance Institute to pay old-age pensions to those who had worked here for many years but had reached retiring age well before qualifying for a pension under the National Insurance Law.

She is deeply mourned by her family in Haifa and in England, including her great-grandchildren, but many of her younger friends and admirers. We are all proud to have known her.

JERUSALEM KITCHEN / Sybil Zimmerman

Filling the cookie jar

I HAVE never done a cost analysis. Ingredient by ingredient, to determine whether or not home-baked cookies are cheaper than store bought, but many people feel a cookie jar filled with your favourite cookies is a real treat to have with one's coffee, milk, tea or cocoa.

CHIP COCOALATE COOKIES

1/2 cup butter or margarine
1/2 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup white sugar
1 egg
1 1/2 cups flour
1/2 t. baking soda
1/2 t. salt
1 cup bits of chocolate from a semi-sweet candy bar
1/2 cup chopped nuts

1. Cream butter or margarine, brown and white sugars and vanilla in a mixing bowl until light and fluffy.

2. Add egg and beat. Combine flour, baking soda and salt. Add to creamed mixture.

3. Add chocolate bits and nuts.

4. Drop by teaspoon onto ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in 375°F. (190°C) oven 8-10 minutes until brown. Remove to wax paper-coated surface with pancake turner, let cool and store in closed cookie jar.

HERMITS

1/2 cup butter or margarine
1 cup brown sugar
2 eggs

1. Melt butter and sugar in a pot over or in another boiling water (like a double boiler). Pour melted chocolate (or cocoa if using this instead) in bowl with margarine. Add eggs and sugar and blend.

2. Combine flour, coffee and salt and add to creamed mixture.

3. Spoon batter into a greased layer pan or into several cake pans. Sprinkle nuts on top.

4. Bake in 375°F. (190°C) oven 30-45 minutes. Cut into squares when cool.

2 T. water
1 1/2 cups flour
1 T. instant coffee
1/2 t. baking soda
1/2 t. cinnamon
1/2 t. salt
1/2 t. nutmeg
1/2 t. cloves
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup chopped nuts

1. Cream butter or margarine and sugar. Add egg and water.

2. Combine flour, coffee, soda, cinnamon, salt, nutmeg and cloves. Add to creamed mixture. Add nuts and raisins and mix.

3. Drop by teaspoon, 2 inches apart, on greased cookie sheet. Bake in 375°F. (190°C) oven 10-12 minutes.

OATMEAL COOKIES

1 cup butter or margarine
1 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup white sugar
2 eggs
1 t. vanilla
1 1/2 cups flour
2 cups uncooked oatmeal
1 t. baking soda
1 t. salt

1. Cream butter or margarine with sugar and eggs and vanilla.

2. Combine flour, oatmeal, baking soda and salt. Mix with creamed mixture until smooth, then add nuts.

3. Drop by teaspoon, 2 inches apart, on ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in 375°F. (190°C) oven 15 minutes.

MARILYN'S MOCHA BARS

150 grams bittermost chocolate or 18 T. cocoa
800 grams margarine
4 eggs
2 cups sugar
2 cup flour
2 T. instant coffee
1/2 t. salt
chopped nuts

1. Melt bittermost chocolate in a pot over or in another boiling water (like a double boiler). Pour melted chocolate (or cocoa if using this instead) in bowl with margarine. Add eggs and sugar and blend.

2. Combine flour, coffee and salt and add to creamed mixture.

3. Spoon batter into a greased layer pan or into several cake pans. Sprinkle nuts on top.

4. Bake in 375°F. (190°C) oven 30-45 minutes. Cut into squares when cool.

General advance on Tel Aviv stocks

Light turnover

Jerusalem Post Finance Reporter

TEL AVIV. — An improved tone was felt in the equity market yesterday and advances were noted in the various segments. Trading volume was relatively light at less than 1.2m. The index of share prices rose by 0.51 per cent to 187.89.

Among financial issues, Union Bank advanced six to 330 in an apparent delayed reaction to its favourable annual statement. The 2050 of the shares of the Big Three banks remained unchanged.

Among mortgage banks Shikun B appeared as the most active and gained six to 250. Tefahot advanced by the same amount to 344. The common and preferred issues of the Industrial Development Bank were "buyers only" and advanced to 127.5 and 127.5, respectively.

Insurance stocks had a good session; all shares in the group advanced moderately.

Real estate shares joined the upward movement. Mehadrin was smart 15 point advance to 310. Pri was 17.5 better at 388.

2050 of the shares of the Big Three banks were mixed and did not show any unusual price movements. Ata C shares were half a point lower at 172.5. Earlier in the week a company reported with lower earnings. The deferred shares, however, were "sellers only" and price was pegged at 164.5 in the closing round. In the variables they gained half a point to 165.

Teva (B) was "sellers only" as well. The shares were marked down from 1680 to 1596. Nehushtan (B) were "buyers only" and advanced to 735.

Investment equities, for the most part, showed strength. Central Trade rose by 50 to 740. Paz was five ahead at 424. Discount Investments was a big loser, giving up 15 to 254. The Jordan Exploration shares tried to break through the 2,000 mark. They advanced from 1,850 to 1,980. The warrants were unchanged at 1,730.

The Natad investment dollar continued its slow advance, gaining three points to IL40.22.

Index-linked bonds came through with an excellent performance which brought yields down quite considerably. The longer term 3000 series was ahead by two per cent and in one group by as much as four per cent. The 6.5 per cent defence loans were half a per cent higher right across the board. Optional loans advanced by about two points, on the average.
